Foreword

FOR A HALF CENTURY, summer schools have been an important aspect of American higher education, steadily increasing in numbers, in variety of services performed, and in enrollment. It is logical to expect that the pace of growth will accelerate as summer sessions become one of the elastic elements which American colleges and universities may employ to accommodate the impending surge of enrollments.

To provide needed information on this important topic, the Office of Education sent out a questionnaire entitled, Summer Session Programs 1960: A Comprehensive Survey of Policies and Procedures in Summer Sessions of Higher Education to Directors of 1960 summer sessions listed in the Education Directory, 1960-1961, Part 3: Higher Education. Of the 2,042 questionnaires, 1,964 were filled out, at least in part. In Part IV of this questionnaire, each Director was asked to indicate whether his institution gave undergraduate, graduate, and nondegree-credit courses in each of 80 subject fields. The number and names of individual courses and their credit-hour values were not requested.

This directory, the first section of a forthcoming study of the 1960 summer sessions, is derived from these questionnaires. It lists instruction in the 80 subject fields, classified by State and by individual institutions. The data presented here from the 1960 summer sessions has contemporary relevance to college students, faculties, and administrators as a guide to offerings in institutions of higher education. As noted above, the chronicle of summer schools in American higher education is a history of almost uninterrupted growth. It is thus logical to assume that an institution which presented courses in such basic fields as history, Spanish, and elementary education in the summer of 1960 will offer instruction in the same fields in the summer sessions of 1962, 1963, and thereafter.

In the listings which follow, symbols have been used in place of headings over the three columns. Undergraduate courses are shown by a check in the column headed "UG," graduate courses under "G," and nondegree-credit courses by a check under "NC."

The Office of Education wishes to express its gratitude to those Directors of summer sessions of 1960 whose expenditure of time and effort were responsible for the excellent return ratio of 96.18 percent for the questionnaire.

R. ORIN CORNETT
Acting Assistant Commissioner and Director of Division of Higher Education
